

The Money Charity and Our Young People Work

We believe that providing young people with relevant and engaging financial education is vital to set them up for life.

At The Money Charity, we develop and deliver products and services for young people which provide education, information and advice on money matters. We believe that all young people should have the skills, knowledge, attitudes and behaviours to make the most of their money. Our current work with young people falls into 2 main categories:

1) Financial Education in schools

We provide free direct delivery to 11-19 year olds in schools and colleges in England, Wales and Northern Ireland through our Money Workshops. We've reached over 175,000 young people in this way. Our workshops are delivered by a combination of our workshop consultants and employee volunteers.

We feel it is important to support teachers by having direct delivery initiatives in schools, particularly for those teachers who are not confident in the subject matter and/or are pressed for time. Many of the teachers and students we see tell us that they appreciate external experts coming in to talk about money – a topic which is often seen as a taboo.

2) Student Moneymanual

Our Student Moneymanual is the essential guide to all things student finance and student money related. Many young people become financially independent for the first time in their lives when they go to university and have to manage their own student loans and income.

The guide helps give students and parents all the key information they need to manage their money at uni, including details on the student finance package, repaying loans and living on a student budget.
